What's New in the SharePoint Password Change Expiration?

This is a sample web part used to show a warning message in a SharePoint portal site page on Account Expiration Date. This sample web part was tested with SharePoint 2013 and the latest client-side change model. SharePoint Password Change & Expiration was developed by Asim Javed of ASP.Net Web Development Team. This Web Part is a SharePoint Client Object Model solution designed for display of notification to an end-user when there is a change in an account's password expiration date. For system administrators that want to notify the end-user of his/her account's password expiration date and help them change the password to a new one, these web parts will provide an excellent way of doing that. Please read the license terms in the License.txt file inside the Zip file before using this sample web part. License terms for the sample Web Part: This sample Web Part is licensed under a Microsoft Software License Terms (MSL-License.txt). The MSL-License.txt file can be found inside the Zip file. Please read the license terms in the file before using this sample web part. Comments, suggestions and feedback are always welcome. If you face any issues with this sample Web Part, please visit the following web site: As the number of Web Parts being used in Web Applications has increased, so has the need to create new and customized Web Parts. It is important that any Web Part created for a Web Application be reusable for other Web Applications within the farm. To ensure that Web Parts created for use in one Web Application are available for reuse in another Web Application, the Web Parts must be properly exported and deployed to the other Web Applications. This also allows a SharePoint Designer 2007 user to choose a Web Part from a Web Application and deploy it to a different Web Application without having to login to SharePoint Server or become a member of the farm administrators group. This article will show how to export and deploy a Web Part to an existing Web Application from a SharePoint Designer 2007 file. Exporting a Web Part When you create a new Web Part in SharePoint Designer 2007, the Web Part is automatically saved in the current Web Application. When you switch Web Applications, the Web Part remains in the current Web Application. If you want to keep the Web Part in the current Web Application when you switch to a different Web Application, you can save the Web Part to a new Web Application. If you want to reuse a Web Part from a previous Web Application in a current Web Application, you first need to export the Web Part to a new Web Application in SharePoint Designer 2007. If you want to reuse the Web Part from a previous Web Application in a Web Application, you need
