Adobe Fireworks is a raster based program, meaning the computer is doing the actual drawing of images with laser beams and colored ink. Therefore, if Adobe Fireworks is the only program that is open in the background, the RAM will be continuously used just as Photoshop would be, but the image being created would be in Fireworks and not Photoshop. Of course, this is not the case, and you can open both programs at the same time. If you're a more advanced photoshop user, you might be interested in playing around with the editing and adding filters in Photoshop. You can use these filters to alter the appearance of your image, making it look different from what it looks like in real life.
